The Donald Trump Victory

by Shaun Willcock

Articles sufficient to fill libraries have been written, and will yet be written, by those inside the U.S. and around the world, analysing the victory of Donald Trump over that Jezebel, Hillary Clinton, in the 2016 presidential election, and it is not my intention to write reams about it myself, repeating what so many others have said. But a few comments are in order, from one who is an outsider looking in, who loves the great land of America.

The Astounding Victory of Trump over Clinton

It was certainly an astounding victory, considering the forces ranged against him. No question about that. The entire leftist-dominated media, worldwide, was against him, and attacked him in every possible way. The pope of Rome professed no love for him, especially since he threatened to close the porous U.S.-Mexico border to the tens of thousands of illegal Roman Catholics from Central and South America who are flooding into the U.S., and the pope's apparent opposition to him meant millions of Roman Catholics were opposed to him as well. The Communists, Socialists, globalists, and all their fellow-travellers were utterly opposed to him. The Muslim world, and the multitudes of Muslim terrorists and would-be terrorists now ensconced within the United States itself, hate him with the loathing only religious madmen are capable of. Hollywood film "stars" who know next to nothing about the real world but upon whose stupid statements their drooling fans hang as if their lives depended on it, stood against him. Rock and hip-hop noise-makers, passing themselves off as musicians, addled on drugs and daftness, opposed him to a man (or to a woman, or to an undecided, as the case may be): the likes of the way-out-there, weird and creepy Lady Gaga and the body-flaunting, Barack-adoring Beyoncé, to name just two.

As one perceptive conservative analyst wrote, prior to the election: "The deck is completely stacked against Trump and for Hillary: The Establishment will do anything to stop him and are by and large accomplishing this through their vicious vilification and smear campaign against him in the controlled US media. There has never been a candidate running for president in the US who has been as universally trashed as Trump. The Republican hierarchy has made no secret of the fact that they completely support Hillary and will partner with the Democrats to defeat Trump. The debates have been manipulated for Hillary and against Trump by having blatantly pro-Hillary debate commentators who skew all questions for Hillary and against Trump, hidden ear microphones, etc. The US media (which is 100% controlled by the globalist Establishment) has been unleashed against Trump with a fury we have never seen before. The media has completely covered up Hillary's massive criminal and treasonous record – the worst of any major US politician in our history, and taken every single negative (or stupid) thing Trump has ever said or done and magnified it 100-fold to make him look like a fool, an incompetent, or a scumbag. (Sadly, many of Trump's stupid or inappropriate remarks have given the Establishment additional ammunition with which to destroy him or keep him continually on the defensive.)"¹

And yet – despite it all – at the end of the day these Communists, Socialists, liberals, Papists, Muslims, lamestream media talking heads, know-nothing actors and actresses, creepy rock and hip-hop noise-makers, and all the rest, had completely and utterly misread the depth of disgust within a large percentage of the American population. His astounding victory demonstrated this level of disgust, among ordinary Americans, for the Socialist/Communist/New World Order tyrants who have been marching roughshod over America, under Obama, under the Clintons, and yes, under the Bushes as well. And so it came to pass that although the enemies of America, within and without, were all absolutely certain that Hillary Clinton, a woman so evil she makes Barack Obama look good, would easily be ushered into the White House, it was not to be. Trump won. Against all odds, humanly speaking, he won. Despite being boastful, a womaniser, and more – he won. At last, the decades-long death-grip in which America was held by the Bush/Clinton/Obama crowd, was loosened to a large extent. At least politically.

The world is in a terrible state. Everywhere, universally, the radical leftist agenda is marching to victory in one country after another, seemingly unstoppable. The great prize was always the United States of America. And if Hillary Clinton had won, it might truly have been the end. Not merely the beginning of the end, but the end for America. Already so far gone, a Clinton victory would have cinched it.

But it was not to be. Not yet.

And for that, Christians the world over give thanks to God.

Trump NOT a Christian, and the Difference between Church and State

Donald Trump is not a morally upright man, and he is certainly not a Christian, despite the breathtakingly foolish statements of such blind leaders of the blind as the likes of James Dobson, who endorsed the claim of heretical female Charismatic false “evangelist”, Paula White, that she “led Trump to the Lord”.² Such abysmal ignorance of what a true Christian is, coming out of the mouths of these false “servants of Christ”! Do they know nothing of the biblical truth that a tree is known by its fruit? Do they honestly believe that if a man simply says, “I am a Christian”, we must take his statement at face value? Evidently they do, and this just shows how deceived they are. No, Trump is certainly not a Christian. Nor is he a morally upright man in his personal life. For this reason many professing Christians felt they could not support him in his bid to be president.

But this is to misunderstand the political arena. The Bible shows us clearly, in such places as the books of Kings and of the prophets, that certain men may be personally immoral, and yet still prove to be sensible political leaders of their country. And world history bears this out. A great error made by many professing Christians, the result of false teaching by their shepherds, is that the United States of America is a Christian country, and that other countries are as well. This is utterly wrong, and to teach such a thing is to confuse the Church with a nation. It is to confuse the kingdom of God with the kingdoms of this world (Jn. 18:36). There is no such thing, in truth, as a Christian country. There may be countries where there are many Christians, or countries where the ruler is a Christian, or countries where the laws are based on biblical principles to a greater or lesser extent. But none of these things make any country a Christian country. The only theocracy which God ever had, the only one which He ever ordained, was the nation of Israel for a time, in the Old Testament. The true Church of God, however, consists of men and women from all nations and countries, who together form “an holy nation” (1 Pet. 2:9); and to identify any piece of real estate in the world today as a “Christian country”, is to misunderstand the true nature of the Christian Church, and of the fact that in every single country on earth, Christians are strangers and pilgrims (1 Pet. 2:11; Heb. 11:8-16).

Therefore, when it comes to electing political leaders, Christians must never lose sight of the fact that they are participating in a legitimate, but distinctly earthly activity. They are choosing leaders of an earthly country. And in choosing them, they must do so based on which candidate would be the best qualified to govern an earthly country.

And sometimes, the best candidate may not, in fact, be a very nice man, personally.

Donald Trump may (or may not) make a good president. It is too early to know now, but time will tell. He certainly appears unlikely to be worse than Jezebel Clinton would have been, and likely to be a whole lot better. There may be some good changes in America, under a President Trump.

If Trump carries out even half of what he campaigned to do – such as closing the U.S.’ porous borders to the tens of thousands of illegal Roman Catholics pouring into America, sending illegals back home, ending the massive Muslim immigration into America, abolishing Obamacare, rebuilding the military, appointing more conservative Supreme Court judges, etc. – if he even accomplished half of these goals, it would go a long way towards rolling back the Marxist tide sweeping across America, at least politically.

But now to address some very important matters.

Trump, the Jesuits, and Accusations that He is a Jesuit Agent

Yes, I am very well aware that there is stuff all over the internet about Trump being “Jesuit-educated”. Let me deal with this head-on. Unfortunately, there are those who write without any proper understanding of the Jesuits or how they operate. It has become almost fashionable, in some circles, to find extremely tenuous ties between some person or other and the Jesuits, and then to make wild, unsubstantiated claims that such a person is a Jesuit tool. A major cause of this, in modern times, was the supposed “testimony” of Alberto Rivera, a man who falsely claimed to have been a Jesuit priest³ and who loved to hurl the accusation of “Jesuit agent” at all kinds of people, despite a complete lack of solid evidence. As Rivera went about preaching in churches across America, and as the comic books claiming to be based on his “testimony” were disseminated by the millions (literally), many others began to follow him in this practice of branding men as Jesuits on the flimsiest of evidence, or – usually – on no evidence whatsoever. And today, there are many who boast of being “experts” on the Jesuits, and who see not just one Jesuit, but entire nests of Jesuits behind every bush.

Now let me be absolutely clear at this point: the Jesuits are at work, very much so, all over the world, in the fields of religion, politics, and a multitude of others. I myself have written much on the Jesuits.⁴ They are the most dangerous organisation of men on the face of the earth. They are extremely powerful, and Jesuits secret agents are involved in covert operations that make the work of government intelligence agencies look amateurish by comparison. It is imperative for every true Christian to be very, very well-informed about them. Yes, they do train men to be Jesuit tools. Yes, they are massively influential over American politics. They have worked for the conquest of America ever since its foundation. President Abraham Lincoln was assassinated by them.⁵

All of this is absolutely true. These are facts. Verifiable facts. But before one hurls the accusation of being a Jesuit agent at someone, he must be able to prove it with solid evidence.

And this is the problem with accusing Donald Trump of being a Jesuit. For although it is true that he attended Fordham University, which is a Jesuit university, he only spent two years there, before transferring elsewhere. And even for the Jesuits, it would be extremely difficult to turn a man, who was never even a Roman Catholic before, into a highly-trained Jesuit agent within the short period of two years! The Jesuits are smart – but even they cannot perform miracles. To call Donald Trump a “secret Jesuit agent” based on nothing more substantial than a two-year stint at one of their universities is like calling my mother (who was never raised as a Roman Catholic but who attended a Roman Catholic convent school for a brief period as a child) a secret nun. It is ridiculous. The vast majority of those who briefly attend Roman Catholic schools, even when they are devout Roman Catholics themselves, do not become priests or nuns, and the vast majority of those who briefly attend Jesuit educational institutions do not become Jesuit secret agents – especially when they were not Roman Catholics to begin with.

It would therefore be incorrect to speak of Trump as “Jesuit educated”, merely because he spent two years at Fordham. All that could be honestly said is that he was “briefly educated at a Jesuit university, among other institutions.” Unfortunately the internet is full of wildly exaggerated claims, and Christians need to be very cautious. “Just Google it” may sound like the modern equivalent of “Spend years in libraries and other institutions conducting extensive research”, but all too often it is not. Google is not God. Almost anyone can create a website these days – and almost anyone does.

Trump and the American Roman Catholic Hierarchy

And yes, I am also well aware of all the videos on the internet showing Trump and Hillary Clinton together at the Alfred E. Smith Charity Dinner in 2016 (a Roman Catholic charity event) before the election, with Hillary applauding certain parts of Trump’s speech at times. It was not good at all that Trump was there. Of course not. It is as bad as the fact that the Trump inauguration would have a Roman Catholic cardinal, a Jewish rabbi, a “Protestant” minister, and Paul White (the fake female “pastress” who supposedly “led him to the Lord”) all participating.

But pause and think about this. Is this unique to Donald Trump? Not at all! It’s what all politicians do, the world over. They view such things as good PR. Francis, the pope of Rome, made it clear he did not think Trump was a Christian; but Trump wanted the huge Roman Catholic vote in America. So he went to the charity event. If he was a true Christian, should he have gone? Absolutely not. But Trump is not a true Christian.

And yes, in his speech at this event Trump said people need “to stand up against anti-Catholic bias.” But what does this prove? Not much at all. As an American politician, he knows the vast power and influence of the American Popish hierarchy over the tens of millions of Roman Catholics in the United States, and he knew that what Francis said about him not being a Christian would cost him votes unless he did something about it. So he cosied up to the powerful Roman Catholic hierarchy in America. Was that a good thing? Absolutely not. But it doesn’t make him a “closet Catholic”, and certainly it doesn’t prove in any way that he is a secret Jesuit agent. Virtually all American presidential hopefuls and presidents, even the ones perceived as the most “conservative”, have tragically said good things about the Roman Catholic institution – and all to garner votes. It is very bad. But it is not unique to Trump.

Ronald Reagan, whom most American conservatives praise very highly, looking back with fondness and deep nostalgia to his presidency, was extremely cosy with the Roman pope, John Paul II. In fact, U.S. diplomatic ties were established with the Vatican under Reagan, and he and John Paul II worked together to bring down Moscow-backed Communism in Poland and to assist the rise to power of a Roman Catholic-backed version of Communism in that country.

The U.S. Congress, during Reagan's presidency, was the most Roman Catholic in U.S. history up to that point.⁶ Was this good? No. It was very, very bad. It meant that much of the good that could have been done by the Reagan administration was not done. And yet, despite that, and despite much that was bad about his presidency, Reagan still did much that was good for America, and was a whole lot better than the alternative.

Trump and the New World Order Globalists

And yes, Donald Trump certainly rubs shoulders with many of the New World Order crowd, and the Council on Foreign Relations crowd, and the Illuminati crowd, and the Masonic crowd. This is very bad indeed. These (and other) groups are the globalists working for a one-world government. Most do not know it, but they are under the control, or the influence, of the Jesuit Order. So there is no doubt at all that Trump is a man who keeps some very dangerous company, and that he certainly will not be entirely his own man, as he likes to tell everyone. As with world leaders everywhere, there are hands resting on his shoulders and guiding him: powerful, shadowy figures stand behind him, most of whom he may not even be aware of. Just because the one-worlders did not get their preferred candidate, Hillary Clinton, into the White House, does not mean they will have no influence over the Trump administration. Sadly, they will have great influence over it. Their power behind the scenes is just so vast and far-reaching. There are men and women around Trump, and behind him, who are one-worlders, dangerous people, with vast power. And they will use it.

Time Will Tell What Kind of President He Will Be

For all the above reasons, it should be very evident to all true Christians that, even though a Trump presidency will almost certainly be better than a Hillary presidency (or the Obama presidency, or the Bill Clinton presidency, or the Bush presidencies), he should not be fully trusted. He is a mere man, surrounded by very, very powerful and dangerous men.

There are some aspects to his future presidency which are already cause for grave concern, not least his attitude towards Russia. When we hear that Russian President Putin was overjoyed at Trump's victory, this makes warning signs flash in the head. Bright, loud warning signs. After his election he also backpedalled on his promise to pursue criminal charges against Hillary Clinton. And some of the people he has picked for certain key positions are very dubious choices.

But time will tell, as I said, as to what kind of leader he will be. Trump, for all his faults (and he has many), and despite his associations, may yet do good for America. He is no Christian. But throughout history God has moved even wicked men to do certain things which were good for the people under them. One just has to think of King Cyrus as one example. Read about him in Scripture, and see how the Lord permitted him to do much good for the Lord's people, even though he, personally, was a heathen tyrant. Many other examples could be given. And it very well may be that a Donald Trump presidency will accomplish much good for America.

Or – he may yet do much evil. Powerful, shadowy figures can be discerned flitting about behind the scenes, and like Ronald Reagan before him, who appeared to want much that was good for America and the world but whose hands were so often tied by men far smarter than him, far more ruthless, and with far greater power and influence, Trump may be much more of a tool in the hands of ruthless men seeking world domination than anyone realises, or can discern, at this point.

He Will Not Perform Miracles

Be clear about this: even if he manages to do much that is good (and that in itself is a very big “if”), Trump will not be a miracle worker. He cannot be. Christians who rejoice that he beat the evil Hillary Clinton should not make the mistake of idolising the man, or making a messiah-figure out of him. This is what the radicals of all stripes did with Barack Obama when he became president in 2008.⁷ Trump is a mere man, a sinful man, and is keeping some very bad company. Those who rightly criticised the Obama supporters in 2008 who held him up as America’s great hope, must not be guilty of the same sin now that “their” man has won. It is indeed a sad day when professing Christians place all their hope in some man, showing more joy at his election to the White House than they do for their faithful pastor’s Sunday sermon, or for some humble success on the mission field, or when the Bible is accurately translated into a new language.

Only God (Not Trump) Can Stop America’s Moral Freefall

Hillary Clinton and her gang of criminals are out, and Donald Trump is in. This may be good as far as it goes. But American Christians, and indeed Christians elsewhere in the world, need to realise that as good as it may be, it does not go very far. For what is rotting America from within goes far, far deeper. It is sin. And this political victory will not touch that. Having a better president does not mean a better country! America is a country in moral collapse, and it remains under divine judgment for its many sins. It is a country now so far steeped in sin that even though, on the political level, the brazen globalists may have for the moment suffered a setback, unless the Lord intervenes the downward spiral of America will continue unabated.

Two things will see to this:

The first is that the Jesuit/Communist agenda for America will continue. The Jesuits and Communists will not give up. They have suffered a setback, but they have not been annihilated. They still exist, in all the various branches of American society, and they are still very, very hard at work.⁸ They have only lost, for the time being, in the political arena. Nowhere else. They still control Hollywood. They still control the entire massive “entertainment” industry of America, which will continue to spew out its immoral poison. They still control the mass media. They still control the education system, and the radical environmentalist movement. They are so deeply entrenched that no Donald Trump could ever dislodge them. No, it will take a mighty work of the Lord. Unless there is a revival from God, the downward spiral will continue – just slower for now. The worst thing conservatives in America could now do, is to breathe a sigh of relief, become complacent, and think that the battle is won. It is not. It is not even close to being won. And right now, the enemy is winning. But tragically, as has happened so often in the past, conservatives have a tendency to sit back and relax once they gain a victory.

And the second is that the moral state of the American people is utterly deplorable. Americans, like people throughout the West, love to say that they are Christians, but this is simply not so for the vast majority of them. True Christianity is despised in America today, and true Christians are a despised few. Yes, the land is full of churches, but this means nothing when what is taught in the vast majority of those churches is not the Word of God in truth, but a false “gospel” that is a devilish lie. If the majority of Americans really were true Christians, the vile immorality that is everywhere in that country simply would not exist. But it does. Who, for example, keeps the filthy Hollywood dream factories going by their faithful attendance at movie theatres every week? Who buys the “music” of, and thus supports, the so-called “musicians” who daily fill the minds and hearts of American youngsters with their immorality, devil worship, and anarchism? The majority of Americans. So much for their much-vaunted Christianity! It is a farce. Americans are not unique in this – they are no different from the rest of the western world. They are worldly-minded, addicted to their “entertainment” idols of movies, TV, music and sport, immoral in their lifestyles, given over to sexual pleasures, false “Sunday christians” if they are religious at all, Arminian for the most part, Charismatic for the most part, ecumenical, singing and jiving to their “Christian rock” at their “mega-churches” presided over by their heretical “pastors” and “prophets”, enamoured with their feel-good, self-centred, name-it-and-claim-it, health-and-prosperity, psychologised, “it’s-all-about-me” religion.

I write, as I said, as an outsider, yet as one who loves America. I have not watched the fall of America, these past decades, with any joy. God did great things in America in the past, and He has used America in mighty ways. It has been a beacon of hope to people around the world. But tragically, the America of the past has gone. As things stand now, America is still finished, morally. It might now have a better political leader in the White House than they have had for decades. But even if he proves to be a good one, he is still only a politician. That is all he is. He will not, and he cannot, save Americans from their sins. Only the Lord can do that.
